Known as “the mother of modern nursing education”, *Florence Nightingale started to study nursing in Germany, and began rebuilding a charity hospital in the United Kingdom in 1853.

In 1854, the Crimean War broke out. Nightingale was appointed by the British government as a 40-member division leader, and she went to the battlefield. In the Crimean War, (1) she also *expressed her idea to the *politicians in order to *improve the dirty situation and inadequate treatment, and she succeeded in her performance. The injured soldiers called her a "battlefield angel."

After the war ended, she was called a hero in England, and at a meeting with Queen Victoria, she insisted on "improving the hospital on the battlefield." (2) Since then, the death rate of injured people has decreased on the *battlefield.

She devoted herself to nursing education until she died at the age of 90.

*Florence Nightingale: 看護師の育成に多大な貢献をした人

*expressed: 言う, 述べる

*politicians: 政治家

*improve: 改善する

*battlefield: 戦場
